The Duller Report: BHScfeed Unsolved

Headline of the Day

SWOLEWOLF Is Pissed

The long suffering Students WhO Live West Of Lower Forsyth (SWOLEWOLF) have finally broken their silence over the daily abuse they experience at the hands of the McMaster Children's Hospital.

This past week, the SWOLEWOLF alliance has finally come forward to shed some light on their ceaseless torment — a hidden plague which has affected our innocent students, yet which is still unknown to many: the Hospital Pee.

Indeed, The Procrastinator has finally agreed to address this terrible, secret torture which has gone on entirely too long. This disgusting warm liquid which rains down from above, showering passing victims at the Forsyth bus stop at all times of the day.

One is never prepared for the attack of this foul rain, and often it drops into the eyes and hair of innocent SWOLEWOLF who are just trying to get an education. Why are these students being attacked? Why are they being targeted with this unknown fluid? All we know is that the Hospital Pee onslaught is a terrible crime against our own, and the SWOLEWOLF will stand for it no longer. They demand answers.

Spokesperson for the SWOLEWOLF Alliance, Golden Rain, told Procrastinator reporters, "In the past we have remained silent as we were subjected to the Hospital Pee — Hell, I even know a guy who brings an umbrella to school every day just to avoid it— but enough is enough. We will not accept this treatment any longer."

It seems many McMaster students have spent their academic careers blind to such inhumane degradation occurring on their own campus.

"I've never heard of it," claimed Ar-kelly Street resident Casey Spritz, "I have literally no clue what pee you're talking about."

Such responses are all too commonly heard according to Ms. Rain; they claim that students who reside east of Forsyth are often uneducated on the subject of the Hospital Pee, and know little about the struggle of the SWOLEWOLF community.

Procrastinator reporters have approached the McMaster Children's Hospital admin, but they declined to comment.

We may never know the real reason for the Hospital Pee, but what we do know is that for our friends at SWOLEWOLF, their voices are now heard. As for the mystery of Forsyth's hospital pee, this case will remain.... unsolved.

BHSS President Declares War on Poor People In Economic Cleansing Initiative

Now that Justin Trudaddy has secured the bag once again, we can finally focus on the more important government in our lives: the BHSS. The Procrastinator sat down for an exclusive interview with the BHSS President to discuss student politics and what he hopes to accomplish this year.

The Procrastinator: What vision do you have for the BHSS for this year?

BHSS President: I want to make the BHSS into the strongest student government on campus. The MSU has a multimillion-dollar budget – why don't we have that? Because hundreds of our third years defect from our program every year, they don't pay our fees anymore. I intend to stop that this year. I'm going to tell all the medical school deans about the anatomy mark boost; that will keep the third years here for a fourth year and still paying our student fees.

TP: It seems like finance is an important concern for you. Given how much money BHSS lost last year, how are you going to maintain fiscal responsibility in the BHSS?

Pres: Our biggest success last year was Hairy-Carnage because the organizers put their own money into it, so on paper we made a great profit. This year, I'm going to expect every BHSS executive to personally donate $10,000 to the BHSS. Our profits will go way up. I'm also going to amend the Constitution so that only students with rich parents can run for a BHSS position. We'll never lose money on an event ever again. I'm surprised no one's ever thought of it.

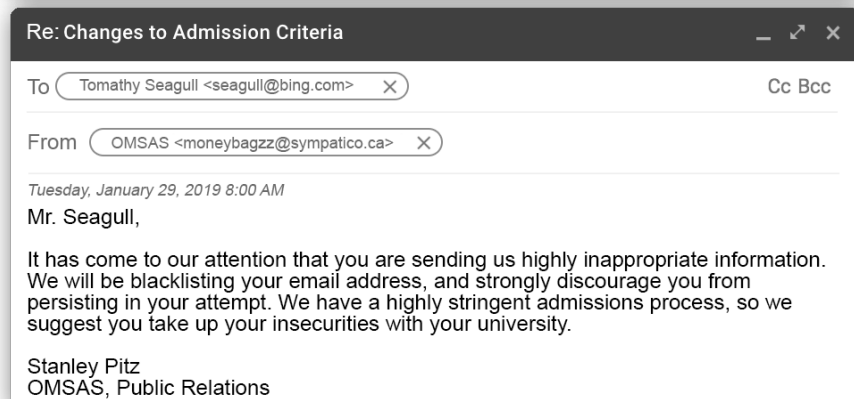

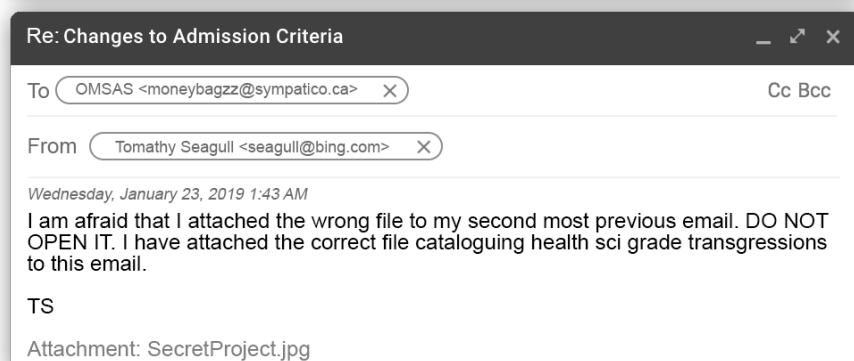

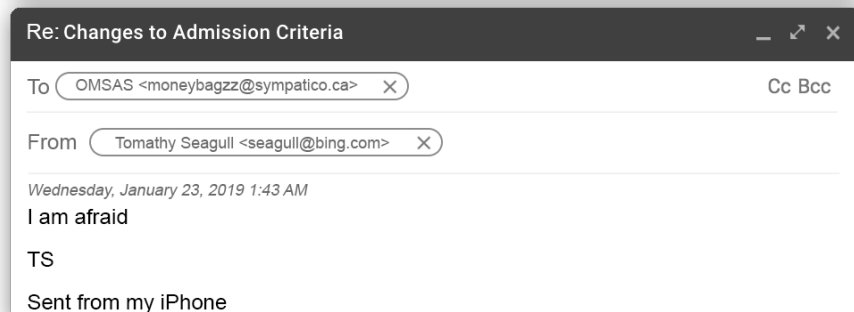

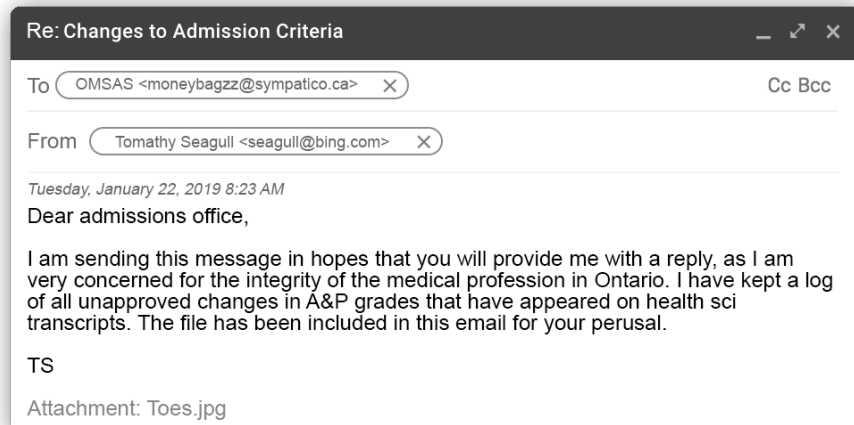

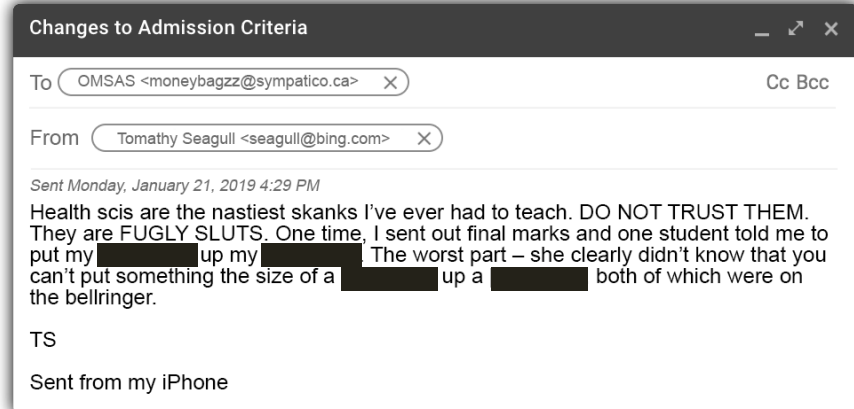

TP: Lastly, how do you see yourself communicating with the student population this year, given that no meeting minutes were written or posted last year?

Pres: Every BHSS meeting will be live tweeted by me. I alone in my unmatched wisdom can communicate effectively with my people – not the failing Meducator, which by the way is a very biased publication, always talking about "facts" and "science." I have my unparalleled intellect to make decisions.

TP: Mr. President, thank you for your time today.

Pres: No, thank you, I'm always pleased to speak to the only non-fake news publication on campus

Scarcity of Green Backpacks For Sale Attributed to BHScs

The demand for green backpacks has skyrocketed across campus, with both the Campus and HSC Stores being sold out of the specific lime-green colourway since the start of the semester.

"I just really like the colour!" says one fourth-year BHSc student, rocking a new vomit-coloured Swiss Gear backpack, adorned with home-embroidered "OMA" patches. "I'm not angry at all that I didn't get into medical school this cycle!" Interestingly enough, photos were later found of the same student on Facebook, wearing a green backpack and captioned "#MedLife #Blessed #MacMed2022 🍷🧡📚"

Rumours of a black market trade for green backpacks have also recently come to light. With basic supply-and-demand economics making it difficult for BHSc students to properly emulate their idols, some Mac Med students have taken it upon themselves to step in and solve the issue. "I sold mine for a massive profit. The buyer, some nervous fourth year Health Sci, had to come in to personally inspect the badges to make sure it was "authentic," but other than that it was

EDENS DEENS DEANS DEANE

Peane's Crimes Exposed

The Procrastinator's team of reporters have noticed a chain of mysterious closures and openings at McMaster University. The university's 7th president, Dattrick Peane, announced his sudden departure from being a marauding (Mc)Master to being a skinny Queen. When asked to give a reason for his departure, he allegedly claimed that, "McMaster ruined his flourishing business." With no further clues, we turned to Russy D'Boi to perform a qualitative retrospective case control cohort PICO study of the recent business changes at McMaster. His 3H06 student secretly sent us the following excel sheet, given that we make him first author of the following article.

A	B	C	D
Mysterious Closures (p-score)	Expected Closures (p-score)	Mysterious Openings (p-score)	Expected Openings (p-score)
Edens (0.001)	Learn Link (0.302)	The Alley (0.03)*	Praxis (0.250)
McMaster Confessions (0.03)*	Psychobiology (0.240)	Cocos (0.0001)	HTHSCI 1G02 (0.572)
	PGCLL (0.234)	Onezo (0.04)*
		Chatime (0.05)*
		Korean Faculty (0.001)

To fully explore the list above, the Procrastinator sent out its two best investigative teams — the sinners and the BHSc Baddie Tabloid (BBT) — who have sent back the following reports.

Sinners

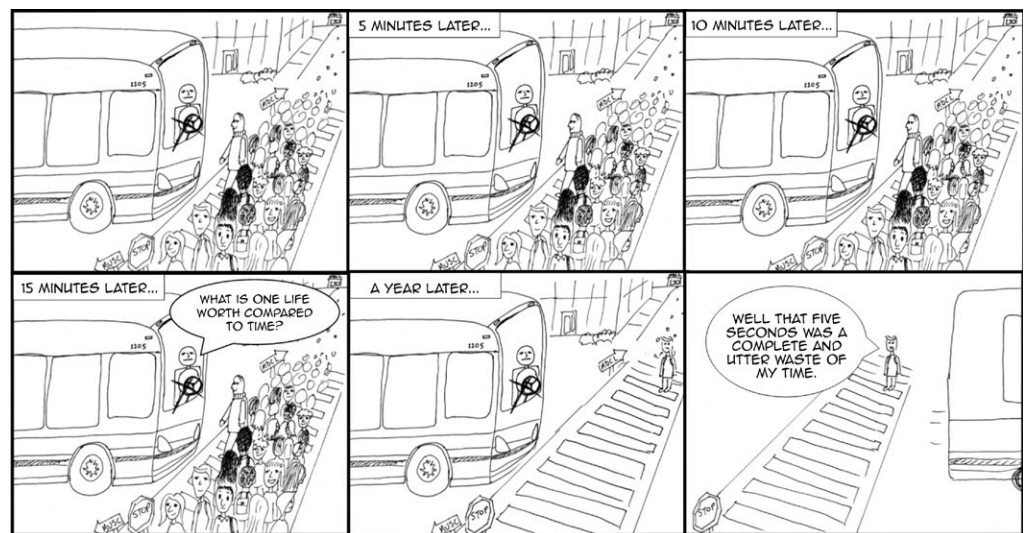

CONFESS: After obtaining secret access to the McMaster Confessions anonymous form, we found the following strange submission. "This will be the last confession I ever submit. I've been forced to shut down Edens because $10 for poached eggs is apparently too expensive whereas spending $12 daily for two bubble tea drinks is a personality trait. I will be taking Edens and this confession page to Queens as the predominantly caucasian demographic will finally value my poached eggs there."

BHSc Baddie Tabloid

SPILL THE BBTEA: Our team of lactose intolerant reporters held a meeting with the newly opened Korean faculty at student centre (only agreed to meet if held at Chatime). The faculty dean, Korya Bu, said that with a certain person out of the picture, not only could she open the faculty, but she could finally bring her several BBT franchises to McMaster. She then began to talk about her Behind The Scenes (BTS) husband Jungle Book, who we believe may be a suspect in this case. Further investigations are needed.

Synthesizing these two reports, we hypothesize that Dattrick Peane, the owner of Edens and McMasterConfessions, was pushed out to make room for McMaster's new love, bubble tea. Although students continue to mourn their loss, they've embraced this new milky wave; one BHSc student exclaimed, "My Doctors Sans Borders club is excited to hold our new Bubble Tea Sans Lactose fundraiser! Please come out and spend $2 more for what you can already buy in student centre."

Big Boba's Dirty Secret: Analyzing the Psychoactive Agents in Bubble Tea

Tap E. Aoki, Tarah Slush, Boba Wang

ABSTRACT: Bubble tea beverages from vendors ($n = 5$) within a 5 km radius of McMaster University were tested for psychoactive agents. The results indicate that the drinks contained traces of 'substance X' - a compound that has been known to be used in mind-control experiments.

Discussion: Bubble tea is a popular beverage among Health Sciences students for its accessibility and taste, with some students self-diagnosing themselves with a "bubble tea addiction" (BTA). Avid bubble tea drinkers ($n = 1,200$) were interviewed, and 105% reported having common delusional periods. During these periods, students' experiences ranged from romantic dreams of first year Cell Bio professors to strong beliefs of the ability to get into medical school by third year. It took an average of 2 hours for substance X to leave the bloodstream, and students would subsequently fall into a state of depression once they had to face reality. The evidence shows that Big Boba is targeting students, but for what reason? Further research is needed to elucidate this relationship.

Drama in the community

Unless you've been living under a rock recently, you've probably been tuned into the literary works of "@bhsc_drama".

In the likes of great storytellers like Humans of BHSc or sixBuzzTV, @bhsc_drama tells raw and visceral human stories that give us little glimpses into our own humanity.

On May 27, 2019, they released their "#24" story, which has been stirring up the health science community ever since. The story reads "dis page stOOPID [sic], xoxo gossip pathogen", which has been leaving many readers outraged and confused. Who would dare make such an accusation? Are we the stupid ones? Are there secret affairs occurring in the Pathogen community? Today, we may be one step closer to answering these questions, after an investigative report from our journalist team.

We first had to examine #12. Being a divisor of 24, 12 had to be a prime suspect in understanding the identity of the original post. It seemed that #12 shared similar sentiments as #24, wanting to "delete this account you [redacted] idiot."

Even further examination into the multiples of 24: 72 and 96, we found more damning evidence. #96 lamented for the "OG BHSc_ confessions", indicating some jealousy on their part. Even more compelling: #72 had disappeared without a trace. All of this pointed to a conspiracy, a multilayered story of envy and resentment, a bhsc_drama_drama. However, recently our team stumbled upon the key to puzzle. After performing a multivariable regression analysis, three numbers appeared: 7, 8, 9. $7+8+9=24$. Seven. Ate. Nine. We believe now that #24 may have been involved in murder. One can not be certain until more evidence surfaces, but what has been proven again today is @bhsc_drama has once again demonstrated its unapologetic ability for quality reporting.

I Still Haven't Submitted My Portfolio

An Exit Interview with a HA&BITS TA

Yogi Doe, a veteran teaching assistant for Health, Attitude, and Behavior in Transforming Self (HA&BITS), is undertaking her final year as a TA. Doe was asked to complete an exit interview.

The Procrastinator: Let's start off with your position as a TA in and of itself. There's so much controversy over what a HA&BITS TA does and doesn't do—do you have any comments or responses to offer?

DOE: I know lots of people say that we don't really do much, but that's not true. Being a HA&BITS TA has been one of the most strenuous activities in my entire undergraduate career, second only to coming up with a voting system in first year Inquiry. I remember, once when we were playing the game Squirt, one of the students mentioned concerns over the representation of water-gun violence in the game, so we replaced the violent finger firearm imagery with a gentle kiss on the cheek. I'm always amazed by the thoughtfulness of our students. It truly would be a shame if the course was removed—hopefully, HA&BITS will be here for its fourth encore.

Unfortunately, the interview was cut short by one of the HSL librarians, who cited recent updates to club usage of HSL group study rooms.

RIP to Queen's But We're Different

BHSc Goes Digital

After thorough consideration, McMaster University has decided to open its world-renowned Bachelor of Health Sciences (Honours) program to students online. The idea was proposed when professors began noticing an increasing percentage of students demonstrating signs of enjoyment during their lectures. "We don't know if they're actually taking notes or on Facebook, but why would anyone be smiling during a lesson about health economics unless they were paying attention to something else?" said one of the professors. From the start, this program has been met with criticism sparking questions from "Will this increase my chances of getting into med school?" to "Will this prevent shoulder cramps during group work?" To add more insult to injury, it is reported that the online program will use the server space previously dedicated to LearnLink (#RIP). For courses which require physical presence, Virtual Reality (VR) alternatives have been put in place. It is to be noted that the VR headset cost will not be included in the tuition. McMaster University will be taking 50% of every VR headset payment as compensation for profits lost due to the lack of meal plans purchased by online students. Despite the controversy, the education board has approved this program to launch next year.
